

Allen Denson quoted in American Banker article on CFPB consumer refunds

February 22nd, 2019

On February 20, American Banker published an article addressing why the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) under new Director Kathy Kraninger appears to be shifting away from requiring financial institutions to refund customers in enforcement action settlements. Partner Allen Denson commented for the story, noting that he was surprised that the CFPB did not seek consumer redress in the Sterling Jewelers case.

“At the end of the day, that’s the bureau’s role and primary goal,” said Allen. “I hope that it’s not that they fundamentally don’t believe in restitution. Maybe it will shake out differently as there are more actions.”

Allen represents clients before the CFPB, FTC, DOJ, federal prudential regulators, as well as state attorneys general and financial regulatory agencies. Attorneys in Hudson Cook’s Government Investigations, Examinations and Enforcement practice area provide experienced support to consumer financial services companies and others facing government scrutiny.

Click here to read the American Banker article.

Hudson Cook, LLP provides articles, webinars and other content on its website from time to time provided both by attorneys with Hudson Cook, LLP, and by other outside authors, for information purposes only. Hudson Cook, LLP does not warrant the accuracy or completeness of the content, and has no duty to correct or update information contained on its website. The views and opinions contained in the content provided on the Hudson Cook, LLP website do not constitute the views and opinion of the firm. Such content does not constitute legal advice from such authors or from Hudson Cook, LLP. For legal advice on a matter, one should seek the advice of counsel.