

Bloomberg article addresses buy now, pay later regulatory supervision

November 23rd, 2021

Buy now, pay later businesses have boomed since the start of the pandemic. Although these businesses are already regulated at the federal and state levels, Rohit Chopra, the new director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), has promised a more aggressive enforcement of federal consumer finance laws.

According to Bloomberg, the federal Truth in Lending Act (TILA) does not apply to many of these services because it only covers credit products that involve at least five payments, and most of the companies use the popular pay-in-four model. The CFPB already can bring cases against buy now pay later firms under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA), a key fair lending law, as well as the Electronic Funds Transfer Act (EFTA) and other federal consumer finance laws. The Bureau also has broad authority to bring enforcement actions against unfair, deceptive, and abusive acts and practices (UDAAP) by the industry.

“People forget that there’s actually existing law that applies,” said Catherine Brennan, a partner at Hudson Cook LLP.

Catherine chairs Hudson Cook’s Fintech practice. She engages in credit due diligence on behalf of investors in fintech firms, bank partnership platforms, small business lenders, merchant cash advance companies, consumer finance companies, title loan companies and payday lenders. Catherine also assists national and state banks, investment banks, consumer and commercial finance companies, mortgage bankers, installment lenders and other licensed lenders in the development and maintenance of nationwide consumer and commercial lending programs.

Click here to read the Bloomberg article.

Hudson Cook, LLP provides articles, webinars and other content on its website from time to time provided both by attorneys with Hudson Cook, LLP, and by other outside authors, for information purposes only. Hudson Cook, LLP does not warrant the accuracy or completeness of the content, and has no duty to correct or update information contained on its website. The views and opinions contained in the content provided on the Hudson Cook, LLP website do not constitute the views and opinion of the firm. Such content does not constitute legal advice from such authors or from Hudson Cook, LLP. For legal advice on a matter, one should seek the advice of counsel.