

Partner Allen Denson comments for Law360 on the CFPB complaint database

January 9th, 2019

On January 8, Law360 published results from LendEDU's analysis of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's (CFPB) complaint database on grievances submitted about regional and diversified banks in 2018. According to Law360, the CFPB does not fact-check the complaints collected in its database, but it does use them to inform its supervision and enforcement activities. Allen Denson told Law360 that he has "...had investigations that have been opened off a single complaint." Due to the unsubstantiated nature of the complaints, Allen said that it is hard to draw any firm conclusions about what's going on inside a bank or what kind of regulatory scrutiny it could be in for based on complaint statistics alone.

"The bureau uses [the database] to try to make informed decisions, but sometimes it doesn't have the best information because the complaints aren't always accurate," Allen added.

Allen represents clients before the CFPB, FTC, DOJ, federal prudential regulators, as well as state attorneys general and financial regulatory agencies. Attorneys in Hudson Cook's Government Investigations, Examinations and Enforcement practice area provide experienced support to consumer financial services companies and others facing government scrutiny.

Subscribers to Law360 may click here to read the article.

Hudson Cook, LLP provides articles, webinars and other content on its website from time to time provided both by attorneys with Hudson Cook, LLP, and by other outside authors, for information purposes only. Hudson Cook, LLP does not warrant the accuracy or completeness of the content, and has no duty to correct or update information contained on its website. The views and opinions contained in the content provided on the Hudson Cook, LLP website do not constitute the views and opinion of the firm. Such content does not constitute legal advice from such authors or from Hudson Cook, LLP. For legal advice on a matter, one should seek the advice of counsel.