

Partner Catherine Brennan comments for Bloomberg Law on California's "mini-CFPB"

September 2nd, 2020

On August 31, 2020, the California legislature passed the California Consumer Financial Protection Law ("CCFPPL"). The CCFPL will presumably be signed by Governor Gavin Newsom, as he included funding for its enactment in his 2020-2021 budget. The Department of Business Oversight would become the Department of Financial Protection and Innovation (DFPI), and expand its ability to charge companies with unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices (UDAAP). Bloomberg Law reported that the financial watchdog's enforcement powers could extend to online small business lenders as well. It will have the option to regulate nonbank small business lenders, many of which are fintech companies, but does not require it.

Nonbank small business financing has grown swiftly since the 2008 recession but has often been left in a "Wild West" of little to no regulation, Hudson Cook Partner Catherine Brennan told Bloomberg. "It's not surprising the largest state in the country would try to impose regulations onto that market," she said.

The agency's oversight of some of the most cutting-edge fintech companies, including virtual currency issuers and exchanges and wage access and payments companies, is set to expand. The legislation also broadens the UDAAP authority over payday lenders, student loan services, and debt collectors.

Subscribers to Bloomberg Law may click here to read the story.

Hudson Cook, LLP provides articles, webinars and other content on its website from time to time provided both by attorneys with Hudson Cook, LLP, and by other outside authors, for information purposes only. Hudson Cook, LLP does not warrant the accuracy or completeness of the content, and has no duty to correct or update information contained on its website. The views and opinions contained in the content provided on the Hudson Cook, LLP website do not constitute the views and opinion of the firm. Such content does not constitute legal advice from such authors or from Hudson Cook, LLP. For legal advice on a matter, one should seek the advice of counsel.